Course description

This course will explore a variety of approaches in the principles and practice of effective teaching for English teachers. It will be a highly interactive course with modules on practice teaching and research units on current methodology. Students will develop a familiarity with resources and reference materials for use with EFL students. Active participation, attendance and the completion of assignments are required. Please order the Richards and Rodgers book in time for the course start.

Expectations: Attendance must be regular, reading preparation and active participation are necessary components of oral grade. Students are required to keep a self-reflection journal, to plan and carry out a lesson, hand in a lesson plan and self-reflect on the process. Students are required to develop materials and upload them to AGORA to create a basic toolkit for all participants. Students are required to work effectively in groups and complete all assignments on time.
