Round Table Discussion
“New Speakers at the Multilingual University”

This Round Table addresses how multilingual communication is experienced and managed in European universities today. Drawing on their research and professional expertise, the participants discuss how the increasing mobility of researchers and students in a globalised world shape today's language practices and future language policies in Higher Education institutions. They consider gains and risks of the drift towards English-language scholarship in the Humanities, challenges and opportunities raised by an increasingly mobile and multilingual population of researchers and students, and visions for a sustainable management of linguistic diversity in the academic world.

Participants:

- Hartmut Haberland, Professor of German language and sociolinguistics of globalisation, Roskilde University, Denmark
- Adelheid Hu, Professor for Educational Science: Multilingual Learning and Literacies, University of Luxembourg
- Theresa Lillis, Professor of English Language and Applied Linguistics, The Open University, UK
- Courtney Peltzer-Hönicke, Head of International affairs, Universität Hamburg

Hosts:

- Jannis Androutsopoulos and Margarita Giannoutsou, Universität Hamburg

The event includes a question-and-answer session with the audience.
