| Course description: This class introduces students to the phonetics and phonology of Learner Englishes and Postcolonial Varieties of English. Why do learners struggle to acquire or pronounce certain sounds in a target-like manner? In what ways does Indian English sound different from other varieties? What is intelligibility and why is it important for the use of English as a Lingua Franca? As we explore these and similar questions, we will learn a range of methods, including how to analyse speech acoustically with dedicated computer software. Thus, students in this class should ideally not have a deep-seated aversion to numbers and to working with computers. This class is organised as an intensive course, with a preliminary meeting in May (which may be missed with suitable justification, otherwise your spot gets reassigned) and four longer meetings in June and July (which may not be missed). | |
