Veranstaltungskommentar

This course looks at how linguists work empirically. Students will get an insight into different types of linguistic data and see how we can work with them in qualitative and in quantitative terms. The quantitative perspective entails a more detailed look at different types of frequencies and how these can be used and interpreted.

In the course of the semester, students will learn to set up hypotheses as well as conduct and present their own little corpus studies from start to finish. This hands-on exercise will prepare them for their own empirical studies in the context of linguistic term papers.
