Course description:

In this course students will be introduced to primary texts from the U.S. literary canon as well as to the most significant concepts in the area of literary & cultural studies. We will proceed chronologically from the beginnings of U.S. literature during the colonial period on through to the present and explore the ways key concepts in literary studies can better help us understand the primary texts. We will also focus on media literacy as well as upon practical aspects of reading, research and citation. The goal for students is to learn to work independently and creatively with literature and to develop a critical perspective on past and present literary developments.

Please note that the regular attendance of the course tutorial for the 1a seminar is mandatory. You can sign up for the tutorial during the first course session.
