Course description: In the opening part, this seminar will recall a small selection of defining positions in the literary and cultural debates of the twentieth century. You will thus revisit a number of foundational texts with a lasting impact on critical practice. They will serve as points of reference for the rest of the course. For the main part of the seminar, we will turn to some of the emerging twenty-first-century discussions as they contest, revise and expand critical practice; there will be room for your input in this schedule. Course requirements are regular attendance, active participation and thorough reading of the assigned texts. In addition, each of you will provide one 15-minute introduction to the readings, preferably with reference to a very short primary text.
