Course description:

In this course the depiction of place and the relevance of setting will be addressed. Language work will be based on selected texts from literature, journals, travel writing, the arts etc., while various recorded materials will be used as well. While emphasis will be placed on developing reading and oral skills, students will also have the opportunity to do creative and academic writing.

Although much of the work will be done in class, students will be expected to do regular preparation at home, mainly in the form of reading, short writing tasks, and text or topic preparation.

Assessment will be based on all work set during the course. This will include an oral report (pair work) and a group project, both of which will be prepared outside of class. There will also be an in-class academic essay of 3 hours and various shorter writing tasks.
