Description:

This course will focus on the short story by analysing its formal elements such as plot, character, point of view, conflict, setting and mood, style and symbolism. By exploring writing from North America and Britain, the craft of short fiction will be examined and practiced. Students will write short works as a method of building vocabulary, experimenting with language and style, and analysing syntax and structure. Grades will be based on assessment through writing assignments and exercises, both in-class and at home.
