Description:

This course has been specifically designed to address the needs of education majors (Lehramt students), although literature and linguistic majors are also welcome. It aims to introduce and implement study skills for improving students' English language abilities, in particular those needed for listening, speaking, reading and writing English in a teaching environment. We will focus on activities and texts that deal with English language teaching methodology and approaches and have opportunities to practically implement teaching ideas discussed during the course. Students will be required to give two short presentations in the form of mini-lessons, keep a written portfolio of language work, create some English teaching materials as well as complete an independent learning segment of the course focusing on the English grammar needed in the English language classroom (see required literature below).

Required literature:

Reading:

Jim Scrivener: Learning Teaching. The Essential Guide to English Language Teaching. Third Edition. Macmillan, 2011.

Independent study:

Martin Parrott: Grammar for English Language Teachers. Second Edition. CUP 2010.

We strongly recommend investing in the purchase of both of the above books as they will certainly be great assets in your further careers as English language teachers.
