Course description: This lecture course provides a survey of the major properties that together constitute the linguistic profile of Modern English. The focus is on Standard British (and American) English. We will examine all analytical levels including orthography, phonology, morphology, lexicology and syntax, and work out the particularities of English at each of these levels. The interfaces of these levels as well as the degree to which they are informationally encapsulated or operate in an interactive fashion will be given particular attention. An attempt will also be made to go beyond the individual levels and look for cross-level parallels with an eye to getting closer to the core of the language. Requirements: regular attendance, short tests
