Course description and requirements:

In this seminar you will read a range of different textual sources that reflect on theory and method, and you will apply their insights to the analysis of a selection of primary texts. You will focus, in particular, on the relations between literary texts and other media. Moreover, you will distinguish the different forms this dialogue may take, such as intertextual relations to other media, media combination (multimedia), and media change. You will acquire tools for analyzing the different relations between texts and other media, and you will explore the complexities of these forms in specific historical and cultural contexts.

The textual examples will be taken from American and British literature and culture and they will cut across narrative fiction, drama/performance, and film.

A reader will be provided at the beginning of the seminar (via AGORA).

The requirements for receiving full course credit are: Regular attendance and active participation, excellent knowledge of the texts (to be obtained via careful reading), several shorter written assignments, as well as a long term paper to be completed at the end of the semester.
