Course description:

This course will deal with a variety of topics connected with food and the role it plays in various contexts. Language activities will be based on a selection of written and oral materials, which may include film and other recorded media, as well as literary and non-literary texts from different periods. Students will be able to develop their language skills at an advanced level, including vocabulary expansion, register, expression and syntax in spoken and written use.

Students will be expected to do homework in the form of reading, text and/or topic preparation, Internet research (for short oral presentations), and short writing tasks. Particular emphasis will be placed on developing reading and oral skills, but students will also have the opportunity to do creative and academic writing.

Assessment will be based on all work set during the course, including – an oral report (pair work), preparing and presenting a group project, listening tasks, and two in-class writing assignments.

Students must attend the first session to retain their place in the course.
